INTRODUCTION

This guide has been developed to assist and support Life Saving Victoria's members to choose their development and training pathways. The document contains useful information on suggested learning pathways. These pathways are not intended to be compulsory, but to be used as a guide for members as they progress through the different aspects of lifesaving in Victoria.

What is nationally recognised training?

A course that leads to vocational qualifications or units(s) of competency that are recognised across Australia. Only Registered Training Organisations, such as Life Saving Victoria that meet quality standards can provide this type of training. Many courses that you could participate in will be nationally recognised. These units of competencies are not only recognised in lifesaving but also other industries. For more information please contact Life Saving Victoria.
